Re: Riverside Avenue Superfund Site

Dear Ms. Iuso:

A per your request enclosed are two compact discs containing documentation linking Brown Chemical Company, to the Riverside Avenue Superfund Site in Newark, New Jersey. The two compact discs were compiled by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's contractor during EPA's removal action at the Abrachem Chemical Superfund Site in Clifton, New Jersey. The compact discs contain a complete inventory on an Excel spread sheet of all drums and other containers that were removed from the Abrachem Site by EPA. The compact discs also contain photographs of containers that were removed from the Abrachem Site. As discussed the Riverside and Abrachem Site are related in that some containers which ended up at the Abrachem Site appear to have originated from the Riverside Site via a company named Frey Industries, Inc.

To find entries regarding Brown Chemical Company on the spread sheet, conduct a "Find All" search for "Brown." The Brown entries will then appear on a list which provides the relevant nexus information, including the contents of the containers. The numbers that identify the photographs of the containers can be found under column "A" of the spread sheet for any individual entry. The photographs are in a separate file on the CDs and can be located by reference to the number found under Column A of the drum inventory.

Dear William,

I received the CD from Michael Van Italie yesterday with the documents. Thank you for letting me know that they apply to the Riverside Avenue site as well.

With regard to an extension until April 30 to answer the request for information, we are requesting it in order to allow sufficient time to perform the document review and prepare the response. Clariant Corporation recently acquired Sud Chemie, Inc., the successor to United Dessicants. The companies are currently undergoing an integration process, including personnel and business software systems, and that adds time to the document gathering and reviewing process. We appreciate your consideration in granting an extension.

Regards,

Marty
